Franco Riva is full professor in the Faculty of Letters and Philosophy of the Catholic University of Milan, where he teaches Moral Philosophy, Ethics, Social Ethics and Public Space, Anthropology. The motif of otherness guides his research along the lines of the other thought and of a concrete phenomenology (Kierkegaard, Buber, Marcel, Ricoeur, Lévinas, etc.), but with careful attention to classical sources. The main and intertwined cornerstones of the research, with monographic approaches, are the issues of the body and the word (analogy, dialogue), the phenomenologies of the contemporary, the foundations of the interhuman, the tension between interpersonal relationships and public space, ethics, the social and democracy. He is the author of numerous volumes, with various awards and recognitions. Participates in different interdisciplinary perspectives (ethical-political, urbanity and architecture, pedagogy, hermeneutics and religion) and social activities, especially regarding the world of work and the city.
